INTRODUCTION

Good communication skills in Medicine are key component in interprofessional communication and in breaking down barriers in physician-patient relationship. Courses are developed by a group of professionals with experience in pedagogical interventions and approaches in medicine.

This summer school provides practical knowledge and knowhow that can be used to enhance communication skills performance.

This includes identifying the most common communication approaches for interviewing patients in medicine, and the communication strategies to help patients with medication management and minimize medication errors, discussing different communication needs for specific patient populations and implementing tools for communication skills development and evaluation for medical students.

SUMMER SCHOOL PROGRAMME

If you are interested here is some more information: The Summer School on Communication skills in Medicine (CSIM) lasts 5 full days and takes place at the University of Split School of Medicine, in Split, Croatia.
